

Skin Was In At VPL

The facial station backstage at VPL utilizing Clarisonic and Intraceuticals products.

Aside from messy hair, the other major trend I have been noticing as I bounce around New York Fashion Week has been the love affair with dewy, fresh skin. Case in point: At yesterday's VPL show, the backstage action was all focused on skin — so much so that the models received super-charged facials with Clarisonic and Intraceuticals products before sitting down for makeup. As Eileen Harcourt, the celebrity esthetician providing the treatments explained, "For VPL, skin is an accessory." (I must admit, I've never thought about it like that.) "When they're going down the runway," she said, "They're glowing." It's a nice treat for the models as well, Harcourt admitted. "The girls now come super early to the show so they can have their spa moment, so it's a nice pick-me-up for them." Well, that's one way to make sure the talent shows up on time.