GLOW LIKE GOLDEN BALLS OR SHINE LIKE MADONNA WITH THE PREFERRED SKIN THERAPY OF SUPER STARS, OXYGEN INFUSIONS.

David Beckham does it. Madonna loves it. Justin Timberlake says it makes his skin look dope. But just what exactly are these celebrities all raving about? Like many other famous faces, they all abide by oxygen skin therapy. Known as oxygen infusions or oxygen facials, these clinical treatments are the pre red carpet ritual of every A-list guy and girl that guarantee the appearance of healthy, youthful and glowing skin.

It's been more than ten years since oxygen skin therapy moved from hospital burns units into spas and salons, yet in an era where botox, lasers and glycolic peels are the staple of most high-flyers' skincare programs, oxygen infusions are as popular as ever. The reason, according to Madonna's personal makeup artist and oxygen infusion enthusiast, Gina Brooke, is because you get immediate results that are really noticeable.

"Why people are so obsessed with them is that there are always cosmetic and skincare companies that are going to sell you a promise, and maybe in three to four weeks you'll see a difference in your skin, but with an infusion you will see a result straight away," says Brooke, who recommends Australian brand Intraceuticals to her famous clients.
