

140 Days Engaged & Counting: Have No Fear, Intraceuticals Facials Are Here!

I'm terrified of facials. Trust me, I've been through enough botched procedures to make me bristle at the thought! So if you're anything like me, getting a facial anywhere close to your wedding day, especially the day before, leads you headfirst into caution zone.

Until now. Here to entice future brides into a new age of carefree facials is the Intraceuticals' Oxygen Facial, available at Carasoin Day Spa and Skin Clinic on Robertson Boulevard. Hip-hip-hooray! Here's how it works:

Once you cozy into a heated bed, your esthetician uses a gentle spray to apply an Intraceuticals Atoxelene serum intended to reach deeper layers of the skin around the eyes, mouth and forehead. Imagine your face peppered with H<sub>2</sub>O—and so much more. Atoxelene is a peptide and "natural form of botox," according to Gina Brooke, Intraceuticals brand ambassador and makeup artist to stars such as Madonna and Eva Longoria. Then you'll receive spritzes of vitamins A, E and C; green tea extract; aloe vera; and hyaluronic acid contained in Intraceuticals' Rejuvenate serum. That'll hydrate, lift and firm your skin.

"Most brides cringe at the word facial before their wedding, but this is unlike any facial," Brooke says. "This is a non-invasive treatment—a cocktail of vitamins and peptides, which is like a tall glass of water for your face—[and] I recommend this treatment for any special occasion, especially a wedding." She adds that getting the treatment the day before your wedding will help your makeup go on smoother, too.

And what bride doesn't want some extra blushing for the occasion?

For more information, visit Carasoin Day Spa and Skin Clinic.

