

The Secret Beauty Blogger

Tips on the best beauty products...from someone in the know.

Posted Saturday, March 26, 2011

If it's good enough for Madonna...

If you're a regular reader of my blog, then you'll know I'm on the eternal quest to find ANYTHING that keeps my skin clear and have tried hundreds (probably not even an exaggeration!) of products to try and combat spots...

Having facials so regularly means I kind of get used to them and they're always great, but I think of them as maintenance really, so when I went along to try the Intraceuticals Rejuvenate Infusion facial, I wasn't expecting anything different. Oh how wrong I was!!

The facial itself is very different, using a 'wand' which produces pressurised oxygen to glide over the face, pushing the product applied deep into the skin with amazing results. My lovely therapist, Michelle Peck (Madonna's facialist who calls on her and her Intraceuticals machine to travel with her when she tours), did half my face to show me the results, before she did the rest. The half she did was incredible; my cheekbones were popping out, my eyes looked bigger and my skin was GLOWING, and that was immediately, imagine having it regularly to keep that up! I'd had a breakout that morning too and had a few nasty blemishes that had popped up, and although this was an anti-ageing facial, Michelle said I'd probably notice a difference the next day with them too.

I actually couldn't believe it the next morning – my skin was clear!! And any pigmentation was practically gone too – I've never experienced that after a facial before, no wonder Michelle and Intraceuticals treat most of Hollywood! ...

Secret Beauty Blogger Verdict: The treatment itself was lovely, really relaxing and the cool bubble of oxygen felt amazing on the skin – if you can experience this treatment yourself then you must – it's unlike anything else out there and the results are incredible!

UK, March 2011