

CATEGORIES

- What to Wear
- What to Shoe
- What to Handbag
- What to Accessory
- What to Beauty
- What to Home
- What to Gift
- What to Travel
- What to Read
- What to DVD
- What to Listen
- What to TV
- What to Gobble/Guzzle
- What to Care About
- Laughtermoon Break
- Fashion Violation

MASTHEAD

Gina Pell
Content Chief

Christina Claypool
Assistant Editor

Cerise Henzes
Editor at Large

Tracie Broom
City Editor

MADONNA AND ME - STYLE

Style: Madonna and Me

This is not a report of a Madonna sighting. I've seen a handful of celebs since moving to L.A., but most of the time I'm too wrapped up in my own agenda to pay attention or notice. (That doesn't mean I don't read Perez Hilton. I do.) However, a few weeks ago I received an oxygen facial treatment from Michelle Peck and that's where the Madonna connection comes in. Michelle is Madonna's facialist. She was on tour with Madge and performed the IntraCeuticals oxygen infusion treatment on the pop icon before every show. I've had a few oxygen facials before, but this is different. IntraCeutical Infusion is described as a "therapeutic grade oxygen infusion system that uses hyperbaric technology to deliver antioxidants, amino peptides and nano hydraters to moisturize and super hydrate". Put simply: I left the appointment with softer, firmer skin. You'd think that the treatment would be targeted to older women, but younger women (such as myself) with dehydrated skin (thanks to traveling, pollution, and dry SoCal air) also benefit from the infusion of oxygen. If you're in L.A. you can get the treatments at a variety of spas, medi spas, and dermatology clinics, including the Kest Clinic in Beverly Hills (Contact: Dangene McKay Bailey) and Rebecca Fitzgerald. Or, visit the IntraCeuticals website to find a location near you.

Posted on 12/04/2006 | Style | Comment

♥ add to my what tos | ✉ send to a friend | Share / Save